

Our approach

Participatory: We believe when everyone has a voice results are more collaborative, creative, and sustainable. No one understands the needs and nuances of a community better than its members. Regardless of the community we're working with, whether an organization or the people they serve, we work with them, not just for them.

Interdisciplinary: Social issues never have one cause and the best solutions don't try to address them one way. We approach our work through multiple disciplines – from anthropology to economics, public health to business.

By looking at issues from many perspectives, we're able to build evidence-based yet innovative solutions that make a difference.

Our Violence Prevention Experience

We have a long history and commitment to violence prevention and have worked at the local, national, and global levels to address this complex issue. Highlights include:

- Developed and tested an innovative model combining social marketing and participatory approaches to prevent intimate partner violence in immigrant communities. Selected as top 10 Best Violence Research for 2012 by American Psychological Association.
- Managed the development of CDC's national evidence-based multisector framework for child maltreatment prevention.
- Co-founded and managed an international non-profit to reduce the risk of exposure to rape through innovative solutions whose work was highlighted in O Magazine, Popular Mechanics, and Newsweek.

Our Services

Strategy and Planning. We're leaders in strategic planning, working on issues from global epidemics to national campaigns and community-based programs. Our experience ranges from ongoing public health issues like immunization campaigns to the dynamic environment of humanitarian emergencies like the West African Ebola outbreak.

Partner, Stakeholder, and Community Engagement. Devi has built partnerships across sectors to improve public health and well-being. We have coordinated national stakeholder coalitions on child maltreatment, immunization, and maternal-child health and provided technical assistance to state and local health coalitions. We have led university-community partnerships and developed alliances to address immigrant issues.

Communication. We are award-winning communicators who have addressed challenging social issues from genocide and family violence to vaccine hesitancy and emergency response. Our principals have sat in every communication seat from senior strategist to crisis communicator to spokesperson. And they've worked with diverse communities around the world.

Evaluation. Devi has experience implementing research and evaluating programs in different settings from resource-poor, rural communities to public health agencies and universities. Over the years, we've designed research to meet a range of needs, including organizational positioning, program design, policy decisions, and donor reporting.

Training and Technical Assistance. Devi has designed and presented a wide variety of trainings, from broad communication training to skills development and technical program implementation. We've conducted training across the globe, with community groups, professionals, and executive leadership. Our technical assistance ranges from capacity development to health systems strengthening.

Our Network

Devi Partners has a growing network of consultants and strategic partners across the globe that have both deep sector experience and diverse skills expertise. We leverage these partnerships to build tailored teams that drive change and deliver impact.
